Forget walls and ceiling heights. Inside the Park Avenue Residence, moldings define scale. “A series of framed openings, accented in deeply articulated moldings in the formal spaces and ‘outlined’ in clean, modern reveals in the intimate spaces, focus the eye on artwork collected by the couple over many years,” says architect Lea Ciavarra. The moldings help bridge the gap between classic Park Avenue style architecture and modern day style.

The home, owned by Dr. Francis X. Claps and artist Denise Green, has great history. It sits in a famed 1930s building designed by Rosario Candela, and served as Dr. Claps’ office for over forty years. In it, he treated some very famous patients, including General MacArthur, Duke Ellington, and Elizabeth Arden.
